

AN INTRODUCTION INTO TEQUILA AND MEZCAL

Agave, often mistaken for a cactus, is actually related to lilies and aloes, and is the key ingredient in tequila, a spirit that, like Champagne, can only be produced in certain Mexican regions.

True tequila comes from 100% Blue Weber Agave, while mixto varieties contain just 51% agave. Agave matures over years, with Blue Weber needing about 7 years before it's ready for tequila, which falls into two main types: lighter, fruity highland tequila, and fuller, earthier valley (or lowland) tequila.

Mezcal, tequila's wilder relative, is made from various agave types, including the commonly farmed espadin and others that grow wild, needing up to 20 years to mature. Mezcal production is limited to specific Mexican states and must be bottled in Mexico.
